

Solve Diversity-Related Business Challenges Before They Start

Discover communication strategies that bridge cultural divides during this free summit for HR, training and development professionals.

Improving Your Cultural IQ: Recognizing the Power of Inclusive Communication

A culturally and creatively diverse workplace fuels innovation and ideas, and can be an organization’s biggest asset. However, supporting team and individual performance while navigating multiple sets of cultural values, professional perspectives and workplace norms requires an advanced set of communication competencies and organizational support.

Being the go-to HR professional with the insight to help managers and leaders turn these challenges into opportunities can be both personally rewarding and professionally valuable. This one-hour presentation introduces research-backed concepts and strategies to help the teams you support recognize, plan for and engage with intercultural communication challenges.

What You’ll Learn

- Tactics in coaching managers and leaders to design team membership and work processes that account for differences related to relational, geographic and operational distance
- Ways to recognize and diagnose potential intercultural communication issues before they arise
- Communication competencies required for team members, managers and leaders in today’s increasingly diverse workplace
- Strategies to help you understand how deeper-level differences in work-related cultural values, communication styles and decision-making preferences are often the root cause of surface-level team conflicts

7:30 to 9 a.m.
Tuesday, Aug. 29
BEST Building 335

This event is free to attend. However, space is limited to 40 attendees.

To register, visit learn.ku.edu/hr-professionals-event

